Superficial temporal, R
V. temporalis superficialis

The left and right external jugular veins drain the regions supplied by the external carotid arteries. Each begins in the parotid gland and run down the neck to the clavicle at the posterior border of the sternocleidomastoideus. They cross the sternocleidomastoideus obliquely and perforate the deep fascia in the subclavian triangle, emptying into the subclavian veins. Each external jugular vein has two pairs of valves, the lower pair lying at its entrance into the subclavian vein and the upper at about 4 centimeters above the clavicle. Tributaries of the external jugular veins consist of the posterior auricular veins and the vessels connected to the retromandibular veins, which include:

- Retromandibular, posterior division (r, l)
- Retromandibular, anterior division (r, l)
- Superficial temporal (r, l)
- Maxillary (r, l)
- Transverse facial (r, l)
